LADIES CAMBRIC AND MUSLIN UNDER- Fitzhugh Lee as a Practical Joker. In 1861 Fitzbugh Lee, now Governor of Virginia, was commanding the Confederate outpost in Fairfax county, as Colonel of cavalry. Col. Tanuant, who was an intimate friend and classmate of Lee's at West Point, was in command of the Union cavalry outpost near Alexandria. One day Tanpant received orders to advance and feel the Confederate position in front. A battalion of men, made up from the departments and the city of Washington, called the President's Body Guard, was assigned him to make the advance. He said to a friend before leaving:

"I want soldiers with me on this expedi-tion. I know Fitz Lee. I have slept with him, and whenever we come together somebody will have to do some good fighting or fast running. I know Fitz will fight. If I had soldiers, and not these dress parade fellows, I would be delighted to give my Dealers in Uniou.

In the meantime his wife bad packed his valise with clean linen and a bottle of old Hennessey brandy. When everything was ready Col. Tannant took up the line of march, along the Fairfax and Alexandria turupike, in the direction of Fairfax Court House. After the command had advanced a few miles and come to a halt to rest, the Colonel addressed his men in the following

"Attention, battalion! I am now speaking to you as soldiers who bave enlisted to defend your country, and not as fellow-citizens. I want every man to do his duty in the time of battle as a soldier should. If there are any of you who are not willing to do this, step'three paces to the front."

Not a man moved. They stood like a wall of granite. This gave the Colonel much encouragement.

"Now, my soldiers," said he, "with this determination on your part, we will continue our advance and drive the enemy back, or canture the entire force." or capture the entire force."

Within a few miles of the Court House they encountered the Confederate pickets, and succeeded in driving them back. This gave the command new courage. On they pushed. But, alas! Soon, Turner Ashby, with his Black Horse Cavalry, came charging on their flank, while Fitz Lee pressed them in front. The engagement began to the property of the pro get interesting, when suddenly Pelham's Horse Artillery unlimbered on the left flank and began to pour a galling fire into Tan-nant's ranks. He rode to the front, leading the charge against Fitz Lee on the other side. The men seeing the situation, became demoralized and retreated in confusion, falling back to Alexandria. The Union forces lost a few killed and some prisoners. Col. Tannant's headquarters ambulance was
